COL. ROOSEVELT GETS OVATION

Frequently interrupted by the noisy welcome of his friends, Colonel Roosevelt said he was glad to get back, and thanked them for the reception accorded him. He said he was especially pleased because of the number of little children who took part in it. He said he intended to remain in Nairobi Bay a long time, and would live among his old neighbors. He did not expect to do any traveling, but would settle down and be a quiet citizen.

At the conclusion of his address he shook hands with hundreds of persons, and a crowd escorted him and his family to his home at Sagamore Hill.

SPECTACULAR JOURNEY ENDS

Africa. They then took the Uganda Railway for Nairobi, reaching their destination on April 26. On account of this place being on the direct line of the Uganda Railway the base of supplies was established here and the party proceeded into the jungle to the south of the camp. Colonel Roosevelt and his party were entertained by a number of prominent Englishmen who have estates in this section, and natives extended every possible assistance. The result was that when they returned to Nairobi in December they had an unusually large number of specimens. During this time the general public had to be content with the news that filtered into Nairobi, where it was gobbled up greedily by the mass of newspaper men, and cabled in more or less questionable form.

On December 15, the party broke camp at Nairobi and started by caravan across Uganda. Considerable hunting was done on this trip, and when the party arrived at Bunk on March 11, 1910, on the White Nile, they had thousands of specimens. Here the steamer Dal was placed at their disposal by General Sir Reginald Wingate, the British Sirdar, and the party started on the 300-mile journey up the Nile to Khartoum, where the Colonel planned to meet his family, from whom he had been separated for nearly a year.

Are Disappointed. Politicians throughout the United States looked forward eagerly for some statement from the ex-President when he emerged from the jungle at Bunk relative to political conditions in this country. All were anxious to know his attitude on the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy, the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, and, in fact, what he thought of the Taft administration as a whole. But they were all disappointed. The ex-President refused absolutely to discuss European and American politics, and stated further that any interviews purporting to come from him relative to the political situation, could be accepted as false.

Nothing of importance marked the trip down the Nile, and Colonel Roosevelt busied himself with the preparation of his European speeches. On Monday, March 12, they reached Khartoum, where Mrs. Roosevelt and her youngest daughter greeted him.

The entire party was given an elaborate reception, and the Sirdar's Palace on the banks of the Nile was placed at his disposal. Khartoum on a special train for Cairo, stopping off at Assuan and Luxor, for the purpose of sight-seeing.

On March 24 the party reached Cairo, where Mrs. Roosevelt was given a hearty reception, not only by the native element, but by a large number of American tourists, who were stopping at Shepherd's Hotel. The Colonel was entertained by the Khedive, while Mrs. Roosevelt and her daughter were the guests of the Khedivah. It was here that Oscar Straus, ambassador to Turkey, and a member of the Roosevelt Cabinet, met his former chief.

At the request of a large number of American tourists visiting that portion of Egypt, Colonel Roosevelt held a reception on March 26 at Shepherd's Hotel, where he shook hands with about 200 of his countrymen.

As the press of that section is extremely radical, Colonel Roosevelt had been subject to a great deal of criticism at the hands of various editors on account of some of his expressions in Khartoum, but on March 27 all parties "buried the hatchet," when the ex-President entertained twelve editors, representing practically the entire Arabian press of Egypt, and told them his views respecting Moslems and Christians. All his guests agreed that they had been mistaken, and voted the Colonel a good fellow.

Popularity Short-lived. But his popularity was short-lived, especially among the editors of the Nationalist press, for on the following day he made his sensational speech at the University of Cairo, denouncing the assassination of Boutros Pasha Ghali, the premier, who had been murdered about a month before by a Nationalist sympathizer. He said that the assassin stood on the pinnacle of infamy, and that "those who are apologizing for or condoning his act occupy the same bad eminence." As the majority of the students at the university are Nationalists, and as Egyptian political conditions resemble a smoldering volcano, the speech caused an eruption. Of course, the Colonel came in for his share of criticism, but at the same time the university conferred on him its highest honorary degree "in recognition of his eminent services to humanity."

The following day about 200 students paraded around the hotel where Colonel Roosevelt was stopping, crying, "Down with Roosevelt!" and "Vive Egypt!"

Two days later the Colonel and his family sailed from Alexandria, Egypt, en route for Naples. He was given an enthusiastic send-off, despite his speeches at Cairo and Khartoum, and, as one correspondent expressed it, "his departure from Egypt was like his arrival in the country. He was the biggest figure in the country as soon as he came within its borders, and he leaves it as the one dominating figure."

On Saturday, April 2, the Roosevelt party arrived in Naples, where they were greeted by thousands of Italians and American tourists. At this time arrangements had been made for an audience with the King on Monday and a visit to the Vatican on Tuesday.

Then came the first sensation of his European trip. On Sunday, April 3, Colonel Roosevelt announced that he had called off his engagement with the Pope, owing to the fact that the Vatican imposed certain restrictions on his conduct while in Rome, which made his presence impossible. Following on the heels of a similar action by former Vice-President Fairbanks, it created a considerable stir.

Visit in Rome. Colonel Roosevelt reached Rome on the afternoon of April 5 and was met by Mayor Nathan and Ambassador Leshman. The following day he called on King Victor, and that evening he and his family were the guests of the King and the Queen at the Quirinal. The Vatican incident was seized by the Methodists of Rome, and a direct slap at the Pope, and following an inflammatory statement issued by the Methodists of Rome, Colonel Roosevelt immediately canceled the engagement to hold a reception at the American embassy.

After being the guest of honor at a score of different receptions, the Roosevelts left Rome on April 7 for Spezia, where Colonel and Mrs. Roosevelt had planned to drive over the same route which they had visited on their honeymoon. They made the journey from Spezia to Genoa by carriage, but their expected quiet was interrupted by hundreds of villagers, who turned out and lined the route to pay homage to the distinguished visitors.

On April 10 Colonel Roosevelt left Genoa for Portofino, where he was given one of the most enthusiastic receptions in Italy. Besides being accorded citizenship honors, a new boulevard in the town was named after him. Three days later he held the famous conference with Gifford Pinchot, in the forest adjoining the colony. Although speculation has been free ever since as to what actually transpired, the talk of these two champions of conservation is as much a mystery as ever.

From here the Roosevelt party journeyed to Venice, their last stopping place on the continent, and on the afternoon of April 14 they departed for Vienna. They remained in Austria two days, during which time the Colonel made several calls on the aged and aristocratic Emperor Franz Josef, and was the guest of honor at a dinner tendered by that monarch. They left for Budapest on the morning of April 17.

The party remained in the capital city of Hungary two days, and on the occasion of a reception tendered the Colonel by the Hungarian Parliament, he made one of his characteristic speeches, scolding the "reactionaries" and "vaporizing sentimentalists" at home. From Budapest the journey was continued to Munich, where the famous hunter was welcomed by Prince and Princess Leopold of Bavaria. But the stop here was very brief, and on the following morning he arrived in Paris.

Round of Receptions. His stay in the French capital lasted one week, and was one of round of receptions, and sight-seeing trips. All the wealthy Americans who make the gay French city their home, threw open their doors to their distinguished countryman, and the leading French statesmen and scholars, including President Fallieres, paid him unusual honors.

On April 23 he delivered his first scheduled European lecture, entitled "Citizenship in a Republic," at the Sorbonne, which was attended by all the members of the French Cabinet, and students from the University of Paris, and many distinguished guests. This was the most important feature of his visit to France. On the last day of his stay he witnessed a sham-battle on the plains of Vincennes between two sections of the French army.

But one day, April 23, was devoted to Belgium, where he was greeted by King Albert, and hurried through a crowded program. His next stop was The Hague, where he was the recipient of royal honors at the hands of Queen Wilhelmina, and from there he went to Amsterdam, arriving in that city May 1.

Copenhagen saw the strenuous visitor on May 3, and the following day he arrived in Christiania, the capital of Norway, where King Haakon and Queen Maud paid him the unprecedented honor of meeting him at the station. The following day he delivered the second scheduled lecture of his tour at the National Theatre before the Nobel Prize Committee, and at a dinner given in his honor that evening he made a speech, in which he praised some of his acts while at the head of the American nation.

On May 6 King Frederick's University conferred on the distinguished visitor the honorary degree of doctor of philosophy. On his arrival in Stockholm May 7 Colonel Roosevelt was informed of the death of King Edward, and this, combined with the fact that his bronchial tubes had become seriously affected, owing to the large number of speeches he had delivered, compelled him to curtail his program considerably. Owing to the close relationship existing between King Edward and Emperor Wilhelm, the elaborate round of festivities arranged for his benefit in the German capital was nearly all eliminated, at his own request.

Cannon, explaining the troubles that face a Speaker. He declared that under the rules as they had been adopted in the Fifty-first Congress, it had at any time been possible for a majority in the House to legislate.

Referring directly to Minority Leader Champ Clark, the Speaker suggested that the gentleman from Missouri would make the best Speaker the minority could obtain. This remark was a signal for an ovation by the Democrats on behalf of their floor leader.

Continuing, Mr. Cannon said that not half as many bills were passed under the new "unanimous consent" rule as formerly, and he ridiculed the suggestions about his role as a "czar." What ever the clamor might be, he declared that he preferred to maintain his fidelity to the majority of the House. Referring to newspaper and magazine writers, he said he would rather keep his own self-respect than "be bent to demagogues and the self-constituted righteous ones who criticize me without judgment and without knowledge."

IN MEMORIAM

SEWERS.—In sad but loving remembrance of my beloved husband and our papa, RICHARD A. SEWERS, who died one year ago—June 18, 1909.

Dearest Papa, you have left us. Left the home you loved so well; But some day we hope to meet thee. And together we shall dwell.

In the grave-yard, softly sleeping, Where the flowers gently wave, Lies the one we love so gently. In his cold and silent grave.

How we miss you; Miss you more than we can tell; Every hour and day that passes Brings us nearer you to dwell.

Friends may think we soon forget thee, And our wounded hearts be healed; But thy little know the sorrow That's within our hearts concealed.

Farwell, alas, our dear, kind papa, Thy form lies cold and still; Thy death has caused a vacant place In the world of our hearts still.

BY HIS WIFE AND CHILDREN.
